

The Evaluation Center's
Evaluation Café Series presents:

Models to Evaluate System Change in Community Initiatives

Margaret Richardson

Doctoral student, Interdisciplinary Ph.D. in Evaluation,

12:00 – 1:00 p.m.
Tuesday, April 6, 2010

Because of the circular and intertwining nature of system interaction, social system change initiatives provide challenges for robust evaluation. Logic models provide a static picture of change, but lack the conceptualization of social change within a more fluid systems change framework. The more dynamic the system change initiative, the more dynamic the evaluation model needs to be to capture nuances that are enhancing or inhibiting change of the larger system. A theoretical framework for initiating system change will be shared to help understand necessary implementation factors for system change, along with an example of an applied, structured framework for evaluation of system change initiatives.
