CORP 3000: HISTORY & THEORY OF PLANNING
MONDAYS 3:00 PM – 5:30 PM, 2129 WOOD HALL
CRN: 46325

CORP 3000 will benefit a wide range of majors and give you real world examples. For a limited time we are opening the course up to others. Come to our office and we will register you. Register now to make sure you get a spot!

CORP 3000 will cover the history of urban and regional planning in the United States as well as some introduction to the history of urban and regional planning internationally. We will follow the development of the theory of planning through readings, lectures and discussion. The course will integrate the history of city and regional planning and the theory about the manner in which planning and policy-making is undertaken, including economic theories, theories of government intervention, decision theory, and theories of knowledge in planning. We will look at the contributions of significant planners, events, publications, projects, organizations, plans, and programs at local, state, and national levels to the evolution of planning practice and the profession in America.
