Creating Course Materials in ARTStor

ARTStor has a new feature, "Tips for Teaching." These tips show you how to present ARTStor images in the classroom, incorporate ARTStor into courseware such as Blackboard VISTA, export citations for bibliographies, and how to use the interactive features of the database such as image groups and folder sharing. If you need assistance of any kind with ARTStor please contact the Visual Resources Library for a one-on-one training session. The phone number is 387-4113. For more information, select the link below.

and classical Greek Art at the Timeline of Art History*

The Metropolitan Museum of Art of New York has created a web site that serves as a one-stop reference source for world art and material culture. If you are looking for maps; thematic essays; information on a specific work of art, movement, artist, culture, or style; compare art from one part of the world to another; or just plain want to have some fun this is the place to go. Read about current and past exhibitions held at the Met. Not only have the developers of this site loaded it with exciting graphics and informative text, they have made it easy to use by including a site search and indexing features. Search for a topic and you'll be presented with Timeline web pages that provide facts, analysis, and thematic essays written by scholars. Results also include images of objects in the museum. Click on one of these selections, read all about it, then page down to learn how to cite the page in a paper, presentation, or publication. Multimedia materials can be found on many topics, too. Take some time to get to know the Met's Timeline of Art History. Send an e-card from the site to a friend saying "Wish you were here!"
